MIDWIFERY LAW TO BE AMENDED

GENERAL agreement was expressed in the Dail yesterday with the Midwives Bill, which was put through its second stage.

The Bill prohibits attendance by unqualified or unauthorised persons on women in child birth; makes further and better provision for the enrolment, control, certification, and training of midwives; and requires the Midwives Board to maintain and publish a roll of midwives. The Board will be empowered to register a woman who had been trained in any other country, provided they are satisfied that the training and examination was not of a lower standard than that adopted by the Board and that the authorities in other countries would certify women registered under the Act on reciprocal terms. New powers will enable midwives to attend post-graduate courses, and to add to their names the designation: "State Certified Midwife."

GROSS ABUSE

Mr. JAMES LARKIN, Senior (Lab.), said he was more concerned with the position of midwives in the cities like Dublin and Cork. They all knew there was gross abuse in the metropolitan area, and that there were people carrying on infamous misconduct. Legislation was too long delayed to deal with these criminals who were lost to all sense of professional or even sex honour. He knew of one house to which women in child-birth had been brought, and there had been no record either of the births or deaths there.

Dr. WARD, Parliamentary Secretary, replying to the debate, said that nothing contentious had been raised. The question of remuneration of midwives did not come under the bill. In regard to the question of giving midwives power to call in medical assistance other than the dispensary doctor, he said that the dispensary doctor was the responsible officer, and giving midwives unrestricted power to call in other doctors might land them in confusion. It sometimes happened that the relations between the midwife and the dispensary doctor were not of the best. If the dispensary doctor were not available the midwife would be at liberty ot call in another doctor, and no one could find fault with her for taking that course.

In reply to the point raised by Mr. Larkin, he said that many of the abuses in the profession could be dealt with under existing law, but this bill substantially improved the general position. The local authority could now take the initiative in the matter of suspending a midwife, and the Central Board would now be armed with the necessary powers for compelling the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents at their inquiries.

Man Dives into Lake To Evade Police

How a man dived from a boat on Lough Erne, Co. Fermanagh, while being chased by two policemen in another boat was told at Newtownbutler Petty Sessions, when John Desmond McAviney, merchant, Newtownbutler, was fined £500. McAviney was convicted of dealing in tinned salmon, pilchards, soap and nails, for the purpose of exporting them to Eire.

John Swift, the man who jumped from the boat, was fined £40.

Sergeant J. W. Freeman stated that when he attempted to board Swift's boat Swift jumped into the lake and swam ashore, escaping into Eire.

Interned Airmen: Dail Question

Mr. DE VALERA denied in the Dail yesterday that British airmen had been released from internment in Eire to save the cost of maintenance.

He told Mr. O. J. FLANAGAN (Independent) that releases had taken place on the basis indicated in his reply to the deputy on November 3rd last, and he was not prepared to go further into the details.

Merchant Navy for Ireland After War

A PERMANENT fleet of modern ships, the development of marine insurance and schemes to attract the best type of young Irishmen under their own mercantile flag were the main points in an address delivered last night by Mr. John Leydon, Secretary, Department of Supplies, and Chairman of Irish Shipping, Limited.

Mr. Leydon, who was speaking at the first annual dinner of the Maritime Institute, held at the Hibernian Hotel, said the importance of maintaining an Irish mercantile marine was now fully recognised by everybody, and was not likely to be forgotten. This country should never again be left without a merchant fleet with sufficient capacity to import our essential requirements from abroad in times of emergency. It was equally important that the ships should be not merely on the Irish Register, but should be Irish-owned and subject to such control as would ensure effectively that they will be available for this country's service.

The possession of a strong merchant fleet was no guarantee that the country possessing it would be free to use its ships as it thought best, unless it was in the happy position of controlling the seas and securing an adequate supply of bunkers and materials for repairs. Certain neutral countries had not been allowed to use more than a proportion of their tonnage on their own trade. Irish Shipping, Ltd., had been offered hundreds of ships, but not on conditions which would enable the company to use them in the service of this country.

MODERN FLEET

The Government had decided, said Mr. Leydon, that Irish Shipping, Ltd., must be maintained after the war. It would be the duty of the company, when the emergency had passed, to maintain a fleet of modern ocean-going ships. He was not going to offer an opinion as to what size the fleet should be, but it should certainly be adequate for our needs. When the proper time came the company would bring its fleet completely up to date by the acquisition of the most modern ocean-going tonnage available. The activities of Irish Shipping, Ltd., after the war should not adversely affect other Irish shipping companies. There should be the maximum of co-operation between all Irish companies, and how this co-operation could be secured was one of the problems of the future. Shipping interests, even though they may be engaged on different trades, have many problems common to them all. He saw no reason why they should not have a Shipping Federation and a Maritime Board, which would be concerned primarily with native problems, and which would work in close co-operation with the corresponding bodies in Great Britain in matters of common concern.

The importance of maintaining adequate dockyard facilities had also been clearly demonstrated during the past few years. Had it not been for the facilities available in our own dockyards, he doubted if it would have been possible to have had our ships repaired.

When Irish Shipping, Ltd., was established in 1941 even very poor ships were commanding fantastic prices. The difficulties had been enormous, and such success as they had attained was due to the loyal co-operation of everyone, in particular, the three managing companies, Palgrave, Murphy, Ltd.; Wexford Steamships Co., Ltd., and Limerick Steamship Co., Ltd. In addition, these three companies maintained a service to the Iberian ports with their own ships, which, with the ships of Irish Shipping, Ltd., brought to this country only cargos of essential commodities approved by the Department of Supplies.

Irish Shipping, Ltd., had extended its activities to insurance, starting in 1941 by covering risks in connection with the transit of goods through Lisbon, which would not, at that time, be covered anywhere else in the world. The business of insurance was expanded, concentrating first on war-risks, which had proved the most remunerative side of the business, and going on to embrace ordinary marine risks on a substantial scale. In a short time Irish Shipping, Ltd., would be regarded as an underwriting concern of the highest standing, and he was satisfied that they had laid a solid foundation for the post-war development of a marine insurance market in this country on the most ambitions scale.

He could not speak too highly of the services rendered by our gallant seamen. Since the beginning of the war 16 Irish registered ships, amounting to 30,000 gross tons, had been lost owing to war causes. These included the Irish Pine, one of the two vessels so generously chartered by the American Government. The total number of lives lost on all these vessels was 135. These men gave their lives in the service of this country.

Irish Shipping, Ltd., had endeavoured to provide for the crews of their ships as reasonable conditions as they possibly could in present circumstances. Their crews compared favourably with the crews of any other nation.

One of the problems which shipowners in this country should consider was whether, by providing special education facilities or other means, effective steps could be taken to improve the status of sailors, said Mr. Leydon. He would also like to see seriously examined the possibility of securing continuity of employment on ships flying the Irish flag. They had established scholarship schemes which should ensure an adequate supply of efficient deck and engineering officers. These schemes had aroused a new interest in the prospects of a maritime career, and it might be that other steps to the same end would be possible.

Senator J. Brennan, Vice-President of the Institute, said he hoped that the policy of the Government would remain what Mr. Lemass had said it to be—namely, that they believed in private enterprise, subject to certain supervision. But that should not blind them to the fact that there were certain national services and enterprises which only the central authority could provide. How could cargoes for the Irish Mercantile Marine have been assembled but for "Government interference?" How could cargoes be assured after the war to Irish-owned ships if there was not co-operation between the Irish ships and the central authority?

Farmers Resent "Unfair Attack" By Minister

THE farmers will not tolerate threats from any Minister in their endeavour to obtain a reasonable price for their products by constitutional means, stated a resolution passed yesterday in Dublin by the Executive of the National Agricultural Party.

The resolution added:—"We take this opportunity to protest emphatically against the unwarranted and unfair attack made upon the farmers of the country by the Minister for Lands, Mr. Sean Moylan."

The meeting endorsed the demand of dairy farmers for an economic price for milk and for 1s. per gallon for supplies to creameries.

Other resolutions were adopted protesting against the reduction of the price for wool, calling for legislation to deal with the purchase of ground rents in urban areas, the abolition of the dole, requesting the Government to establish a land army for harvesting work, and condemning the grant of a transport monopoly to the G.S.Rs.

Supplementary Estimates

Eight supplementary estimates were introduced in the Dail yesterday. They were:—

University College, Dublin—£70,000.

Reformatory and Industrial Schools—£350.

Law Charges—£2,000.

Public Records Office—£44.

District Courts—£1,700.

Education—£1,500.

Superannuation and Retired Allowances—£30,000.

Repayments to Contingency Fund—£1,497.

Radio Eireann's "Good Job".

The degree of Radio Eireann's success could be measured by the slow growth of the theatre in Ireland, where it took a war to fill the ordinary commercial theatres with Irish-written and Irish-produced shows for the best part of a year.

This statement was made by Mr. Roibeard O Farachain, when presiding at last night's meeting of the College Historical Society in T.C.D. Radio Eireann was one of the institutions built up from base. It started soon after the foundation of the Irish Free State, and the average listener's idea was that, although he might grumble, Radio Eireann was doing a reasonably good job. The hostile criticism he believed to be due to some extent to a habit of abuse.

2,500 Tons of Bombs On Berlin

BERLIN on Tuesday night received the heaviest bomb load ever dropped on a single target, says the Press Association. Over 2,500 tons of bombs fell in a raid lasting about twenty minutes.

Forty-three British aircraft are missing.

More than 1,000 planes took part in the night's great air offensive against Berlin and other targets in the Reich.

The British Air Ministry report stated that on Tuesday night aircraft of Bomber Command took the offensive against Germany in very great strength, flying in all operations over a thousand sorties.

"The crews of Mosquitos over the target (Berlin), after the main force had left, reported a very large area of fire, with smoke rising to a height of 20,000 feet.

"In addition to the main attack, Lancasters made a feint attack on Frankfurt-on-Oder, fifty miles east of Berlin, while Mosquitos bombed objectives in Western Germany and Holland. Many mines were also laid in enemy waters. Forty-three of our aircraft are missing."

Bombs were dropped at the rate of over 80 tons a minute between a quarter past nine and just after a quarter to ten, states the British Air Ministry News Service. Of the force of more than one thousand aircraft despatched by Bomber Command, the greater number were Halifaxes and Lancasters, and all of these were on Berlin, with the exception of the Lancasters, which made a feint attack on Frankfurt-on-Oder.

The German High Command stated yesterday:—

"British planes last night again carried out a terror raid on the German capital. In an overcast sky they dropped a large number of high explosive and incendiary bombs on various parts of the town, which caused damage to cultural buildings. The population sustained casualties.

"Despite unfavourable conditions for warding off the attack, the German air defences destroyed 42 terror bombers, according to incomplete reports.

Bernard Shaw's Wife Leaves Fortune for Irish Culture

MRS. GEORGE BERNARD SHAW has left the bulk of her fortune of £150,976 for the advancement of culture in Ireland. Other bequests may reduce the net personalty to £110,000 or £120,000.

The income from that sum, which may be around £5,000, is to be used with the object of bringing the masterpieces of fine art within reach of the people of Ireland; of encouraging the arts of personal contact and social intercourse, and of endowing any institution, chair or readership for that purpose.

Mr. Shaw yesterday refused to commit himself to an explanation on his late wife's will.

Mrs. Charlotte Frances Shaw, of 4 Whitehall Court, S.W., and Ayot St. Lawrence, Welwyn, Hertfordshire, was a daughter of the late Horace Payne-Townshend, of Derry, Co. Cork. She left £154,967 gross, with net personalty £150,976 (duty paid £49,702). Probate has been granted to her husband and the National Provincial Bank, Ltd., Bishopsgate, London.

In the course of her will she stated:—

"In the course of a long life I have had many opportunities of observing the extent to which the most highly instructed and capable persons have their efficiency defeated and their influence limited for want of any organised instruction and training for the personal contacts, whether with individuals or popular audiences, without which their knowledge is incommunicable—except through books.

"The authority which their abilities should give them is made derisory by their awkward manners, and their employment in positions for which they have valuable qualifications is made socially impossible by vulgarities of speech and other defects as easily corrigible by teaching and training as simple illiteracy.

"My experience and observation have convinced me that the lack of such training produces not only much social friction, but grave pathological results which seem quite unconnected with it, and that social intercourse is a fine art, with a technique which everybody can, and should, acquire."

DUBLIN TRUSTEE

With a view to furthering and carrying out the objects which she has had at heart she left the remainder of her fortune to the National City Bank, Ltd., Dublin, as special trustee, the income to be applied in making grants to any foundation, body, institution, association or fund now existing—or coming into existence during the lives of the issue now living of the late King George V and twenty-one years after—having for its object:—

(1) The bringing of the masterpieces of fine art within the reach of the people of Ireland;

(2) The teaching, promotion and encouragement in Ireland of self-control, elocution, deportment, the arts of personal contact, of social intercourse, and other arts of public, private, professional and business life; and

(3) The establishment and endowment of any educational institution or any chair or readership in any university, college or educational institution for the purpose of giving instruction in or promoting the study by the general public of these subjects.

The expression, "masterpieces of fine art," means and includes works of the highest class in the fields of orchestral and classical music, painting, sculpture, fine printing and literature produced by any country in the world in any age.

TO BE CREMATED

Mrs. Shaw desired that she should be cremated and her ashes taken to Ireland and scattered on Irish ground, that no flowers be sacrificed, no black clothes worn, and no memorial service held at her funeral.

Other bequests included:—The letters written to her by Col. T. E. Lawrence (at present in the British Museum), to the British Museum; £1,000 to Sidney James Baron Passfield; £500 to John F. L. Whelen; and her effects to her husband, and the residue upon trust for him for life; £20,000 upon trust for her niece, Cecily Charlotte Coulthurst; £150 each to her gardener and his wife, and an annuity of £312 to them and the survivor; £100 and an annuity of £156 to her chauffeur; two other annuities of £52 each, and an annuity of £156.

WIDE TERMS

A special correspondent writes:—Although no exact details of what will be done with the fund are available now, it is probable that it will follow the pattern of other such bequests—that is, that the bank will form a committee to administer the fund. On this various cultural bodies, such as the Royal Hibernian Academy, the Royal Irish Academy, the Academy of Letters—of which Mrs. Shaw was a member—the National Library, the Royal Irish Academy of Music and the Royal Dublin Society, might be represented. If not directly represented, their advice would be sought in deciding how the money would be allocated.

The wide terms of the bequest make it possible for this committee to do almost anything for the furtherance of the objects Mrs. Shaw had in mind. The establishment of a chair in a university or college would involve the question of what college, which would have to be decided by the trustees.

The news of the bequest was received with enthusiasm in educational and literary circles in Dublin, and former friends of Mrs. Shaw said that she always had the education of the people of this country at heart.

Among the existing or recently existing cultural funds in Ireland are the A.E. Memorial Award for Irish writers, which is a sum of £100 given about every five years; the O'Growney Prize for Irish writers; the Harmsworth Prize, which was a sum of £100 awarded each year for five years through the Irish Academy of Letters from funds provided by the Harmsworth family; the Haverty Trust, which each year purchases a number of pictures by Irish artists for presentation to Irish galleries.

A leading Belfast educationist told an Irish Times reporter last night that he hoped that ultimately some cultural organisation in Northern Ireland would benefit under the terms of Mrs. Shaw's will.

Northern Ireland seems certainly included in the bequests, according to a London correspondent, who adds that Mrs. Shaw's ashes, still in the vault of the Golder's Green Crematorium, are onlikely to be scattered on Irish ground until after the war.

No Immediate Scheme

IT will be some considerable time before any scheme can be put into effect, as the bequest is subject to a life-interest in the fund, which goes to Mr. Shaw. It is possible, however, that the trustees may, in the intervening period, consider how their responsibilities may best be fulfilled.

Bomber Losses

SIR ARCHIBALD SINCLAIR, British Secretary for Air, said in the House of Commons yesterday that in the whole of last year 2,300 British and 907 United States bombers operating from Great Britain were lost over Germany and Northern Europe.

Reserves of Potatoes For Irish Towns

A SUBSTANTIAL reserve of potatoes had been accumulated for use in Dublin and other urban centres later in the season should the necessity arise, Dr. RYAN, Minister for Agriculture, said in the Dail yesterday, replying to a series of questions by Labour deputies.

The arrangements had been made in conjunction with a committee nominated by the Dublin wholesale potato trade, and details of transport and distribution would be settled in consultation with the trade. In regard to price, the release of potatoes from the reserve should be a stabilising factor, but the Minister for Supplies would take action should it be necessary to fix the price. He believed the supply would be sufficient to avert a shortage.

Referring to agricultural machinery, Dr. RYAN said that the quantity which might be imported during the emergency was too small to warrant the introduction of a comprehensive scheme of pooling and hiring. He added that there was nothing to prevent any group of farmers from pooling their resources, but the Department could not undertake to organise such groups or to supervise them.

FLOUR QUALITY

Answering Mr. Cafferkey (C. na T.), Mr. LEMASS said that tests showed that it was not correct that the quality of flour produced to-day was unsuitable for home baking, but it appeared that the change-over from the brown flour presented some difficulties to home bakers, due to their inexperience of the flour, which apparently required different treatment to either the 100 per cent. or pre-war products.

Irish flour millers, he added, were making every effort to produce the best possible type of flour. If the tests disclosed any material factors likely to assist the home baker the information would be made available to the public.

Replying to a suggestion by Alderman A. Byrne (Ind.) that since the increase in the price, the quantity of milk distributed by the Infant Aid Society had declined, Mr. MacENTEE said that the annual State grant of £30,000 to the Society was a very generous one, given over a number of years without a proportionate contribution from the Corporation. Any expenditure by the Society on behalf of the Corporation in supplying milk to children in Dublin in excess of the amount of the State grant would, he said, be more appropriately met by the Corporation.

Mr. LEMASS announced that there had been 2,114 complaints of overcharging in respect of price-controlled commodities last year. The number of prosecutions was 1,002.

When Alderman M. O'Sullivan (Lab.) raised the question of wood fuel shortage, Mr. LEMASS said that the number of railway waggons and canal barges available for the transportation of wood fuel would probably increase in the present season, due to the passing of the peak demands on transport facilities for grain, beet and turf traffic. He could hold out little prospect of increased allocation of petrol for the transportation of wood fuel by road. He added that adequate stocks of good-quality turf were available.

Mr LEMASS told Mr. P. Hogan (Labour) and Mr. T. Murphy (Labour) that negotiations were in progress with the authorities in Great Britain with a view to enabling weekly payment of workmen's compensation in respect of temporary incapacity to continue should the workmen cease to live in Britain.

Asked if natives of Northern Ireland at present in Eire had to report regularly to Garda stations, the MINISTER FOR JUSTICE said that a number of men, some of whom were natives of Northern Ireland, had been released from detention under the Emergency Powers Order, on giving undertakings to disassociate themselves from unlawful organisations, and to report to the Guards before changing their residence.

Germans Attack in Force at Beach-head

THE Germans have launched an offensive against the Allies' Anzio beach-head in Italy, Reuter reported early this morning.

According to Rome radio, large German forces went over to the attack.

John Daly, C.B. Correspondent, reporting the German offensive in the beach-head, this morning stated:—

"After dusk last night German bombers began attacks on the Allied positions—attacks which as the night lengthened increased in numbers. After midnight bombers came over every hour, and enemy artillery launched the heaviest barrage of the beach-head battle.

"German infantry attacked at points all along the front—at some places with tank support—evidently probing for a weak spot, as no attack was made in great strength. There can be little doubt that Marshal Kesselring is prepared to exploit any localised success. Heavy fighting has been going on all day at close quarters, but the latest reports give no indications that the Germans have been able to breach our lines."

The German troops outside the Allied beach-head ring and on the Cassino front are now facing the greatest non-stop air assault of the whole Italian campaign. Since first light on Monday fighters and bombers have been sweeping over the entire area, bombing and machine-gunning troop concentrations, motor transport, and gun emplacements. After flying 1,500 sorties on Monday, Mediterranean Air Force planes next day topped the 1,100 mark in a series of strong day-long attacks against German supply routes and positions.

General Alexander, the Commander-in-Chief in the Italian theatre, after a tour of the Anzio front, said: "We are winning the second round of the battle of the beach-head."

A Naples despatch to the A.P. reported last night that American Invader planes dive-bombed Rome railway yards again yesterday. Warhawks also bombed the shell of Cassino Monastery.

Allied guns were yesterday shelling breaches opened in the German defences by Tuesday's bombing of Abbey Hill (Monte Cassino) and the Benedictine Monastery on its crest.

There is as yet no indication that men of the Fifth Army have entered the monastery area or occupied the hill top. They are reported to be fighting their way up the slopes covered by artillery fire. German infantry are digging-in among the rubble of the monastery, and preparing for a stand.

Within the town of Cassino, one-third of which is in the Fifth Army's hands, American troops are maintaining extreme pressure. In addition to converting every building into a strong point, the Germans have studded the town with steel-hooded concrete pillboxes, protected by armour plate between three and four inches thick, and equipped each with a machine-gun.

Claim for £10,000 Withdrawn

The Minister for Defence, Mr. Oscar Traynor, is withdrawing a claim for £10,000 under the Malicious Injuries Act, in respect of damage to property at Croom, Co. Limerick, by an explosion caused by the action of members of the Defence Forces.

Announcing the decision in the Dail yesterday, the Minister added that he had been advised that the claim was sustainable in law, but added that he had had representations on the matter recently by the County Manager, on behalf of Limerick County Council.

Ankara Radio said yesterday that final casualty figures of the recent earthquake in Turkey were 2,336 killed, 1,871 injured, 7,661 houses wrecked, and 7,818 partly or heavily damaged.—(A.P.).

Helsinki Bombed

Helsinki was heavily bombed last night. The Finnish Legation in Stockholm considers that the raid was a medium heavy one.—(Reuter.)

86 DIVISIONS AT VITEBSK

THE Russians have their strongest forces concentrated at Vitebsk—58 infantry and 28 tank divisions—according to Paris radio.

So far Moscow has not mentioned the fighting at Vitebsk, which, according to the German commentator, Colonel von Hammer, has been raging S.E. and N.W. of this bastion since Sunday.

On the Northern front the Red Army's triple drive on Pskov, with its outflanking threat to the German position at Staraya Russa, is gaining ground in all sectors, Reuter's correspondent cables from Moscow. As they fall back from Gdov along the eastern shores of Lake Peipus, and Luga, the Germans are making great efforts to keep control of the roads, fortifying villages and taking up positions on wooded heights from which to check the Russian advance. The Soviet reply is to send out mobile parties, which filter through the thick forests and liquidate these resistance nests by surprise attacks.

Last night's Soviet communique stated that along the eastern shores of Lake Peipus, south and south-west of Gdov, Soviet troops overcame German resistance and, repelling counter-attacks, continued to wage offensive battles, occupying a number of inhabited localities, while south-west and south of Luga 30 places were captured.

"North of Zvenigorodka our troops waged successful battles for the liquidation of the encircled enemy group. Tightening further the ring of encirclement, our troops captured several strongly fortified points in the enemy defences. Simultaneously our troops successfully repelled enemy counter-attacks launched by infantry and tanks south-west of Zvenigorodka, trying to break through to the assistance of the encircled enemy troops. Enormous losses were inflicted on the enemy."

It was stated also that yesterday 138 German tanks were disabled or destroyed.

The German commentator, Col. von Hammer, late last night reported several Russian penetrations into German positions 35 miles S.E. of Krivoi Rog. He stated that most of them were sealed off.

Monastery "Like Vesuvius"

Doon Campbell, Reuter's Special Correspondent with the Fifth Army, stated last night:—

Monte Cassino Abbey is belching like Vesuvius as I write this despatch. Huge clouds of smoke have been billowing from the battered pile all night and day. Now and then the smoke and dust subside and I can see daylight through the monastery.

The air is thick with cordite fumes. Shell after shell—hundreds of them—rends the air overhead. American big guns have been pasting the monastery all the morning. The American barrage has to be heard to be believed. Big guns, several miles behind me, are hurling ton after ton of high explosive into the abbey.

The monastery is visibly crumbling. The walls are said to be 14 feet thick in some places, but not even these walls can stand up to thousand-pounders.

The German News Agency said last night that when the bombing of the monastery began the 90-year-old Abbot, some 20 monks, and 150 Italian refugees were the only people inside its walls.

ENGINEERS' PLEDGE TO TAOISEACH

A REQUEST to county surveyors to do all in their power to increase turf production this year was made by Mr. de Valera last night at the dinner of the Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland in the Dolphin Hotel.

Proposing the toast of the Institution, Mr. de Valera said there was a great deal to be proud of in the work it had achieved. He hoped it would progress each year and increase its membership, which was now over 500.

He had always felt that the engineer, by his training and work, would make a good administrator, because his whole work was one of knowing his task, having an end in view, and taking practical steps to attain it.

It was to the engineer that they looked for a solution of their transport and fuel problems. If the engineers could aid them to make use of the country's resources and power of various kinds, it would help them tremendously. He had wondered were there not many streams that could be used for providing power for lighting, and whether sufficient attention was being paid to the question of using the tides as a source of power.

The fact that there were not many hearths without fires was due, he believed, to the work of the surveyors, and he asked the surveyors to persevere in their work of saving turf, because he thought that at present they had only about two-thirds of the stocks of turf that they had in June of last year. Stocks of turf were diminishing, while the demand had been increasing.

Mr. de Valera mentioned that a special organisation was being set up by the Department of Industry and Commerce to deal with national planning, and said that they wanted architects and the engineers to help them in that problem.

Mr. T. J. Monaghan, who responded, assured Mr. de Valera that whatever problems might face the engineer in the future they would be solved as regards post-war planning. The best services of the Institution were unreservedly at the State's disposal.

Mr. de Valera on New Regimes

Asked in the Dail yesterday whether Eire would recognise the "National Provisional Government for India" established at Rangoon, Burma, Mr. DE VALERA said that by virtue of the custom practised by neutral States recognition had not been given in the course of hostilities to any new State or régime which owed its existence to the changing fortunes of war.

Mr. O. J. FLANAGAN (Ind.), to whom Mr. de Valera was replying, asked would the Taoiseach indicate why he would not recognise the Government, "in view of our efforts for recognition of the Provisional Government which was established in this country."

Mr. DE VALERA — I indicated very clearly the basis of our action. If the Deputy will read the reply he will see.

British Army Losses in Italy

Mr. Churchill stated, in the British House of Commons yesterday, that between September 3rd—the day on which British troops first landed on the mainland of Italy—and February 12th the following casualties had been sustained by the British Army (including Dominion and Indian troops) in Italy:—

Killed, 7,635; wounded, 23,283; missing, 5,708. Total, 36,626.

King of Hellenes in London.—The Greek Office of Information announced in London last night that the King of the Hellenes has arrived in London.

TREASURES SAVED AT CASSINO ABBEY

—VISCOUNT SIMON.

VISCOUNT SIMON, Lord Chancellor, gave an assurance in the House of Lords yesterday that, subject to military necessity, every effort would be made to avoid damage to monuments and artistic collections, which were part of the heritage of Christian civilisation.

He said this assurance was the reply of the War Cabinet enclosed in a personal letter signed "Winston Churchill." Quick and complete victory, however, must be the first object.

Giving details about the position at Monte Cassino, Lord Simon said the buildings themselves were of small importance. Most of them dated from the 19th century. They were decorated with frescoes by German artists. There was a great church inside the abbey, dating from the late 17th and early 18th centuries. The principal artistic merit lay in the bronze and silver doors which, he hoped, would be taken care of. The most important feature of the monastery was its library, which contained over 10,000 volumes, some extremely rare, and thousands of manuscripts.

Early in the war the Italians sent to the monastery for safety the finest objects from the National Museum at Naples, including the unique collections of the bronze statues and busts from Herculaneum and Pompeii. It would be a misfortune if all those were to perish, but they were no longer at Monte Cassino.

One German paper had said that the Germans had removed the treasures from the Abbey and handed them over to the Vatican. A second stated that 20,000 volumes of books and quantities of manuscripts had been removed. A third said that 70,000 volumes and about 1,800 archives had been transferred.

Archbishop Lord Lang, who asked for the assurance, said Italy's monuments, sculptures and pictures were among the noblest possessions of the human species. "Rome itself does not belong to Italy—it belongs to the world. It does not belong to any particular time, but to all times, and justifies its title of the Eternal City. It is the object of veneration by millions of our fellow-Christians in all parts of the world."

Rome did not stand by itself, because there was a constellation of lovely cities, towns and villages in Northern Italy where the tide of war must sooner or later flow.

Lord Latham said that no more unfortunate time could have been chosen to raise this issue. Three airmen were conversing in an East London train, and one said: "These bishops think buildings are more important than we are." "Let's be perfectly candid," exclaimed Lord Latham. "That is the issue.

"Last Wednesday I was struck by the complete absence of any reference to the little homes of the little people. Nobody seemed concerned about what happened in the East End or in Coventry. I was amazed at the bishop's statement when, having referred to Hamburg and Berlin, and described it as 'a policy of obliteration,' he used the words: 'This is not a justifiable act of war.'

"Those words ought not to be used against these gallant men—(cheers)—who day and night risk their lives to save something which is much more precious than any building—life and liberty. I would not be willing to sacrifice my son for any building in the world, and I believe I am expressing the views of the wives, sweethearts, mothers and fathers of all the forces of the United Nations."

First U.S.A. Blow At Carolines

Liberator bombers, ranging 600 miles west of the recently-occupied Kwajalein Atoll, in the Central Pacific, have struck the first American blow at the Japanese-mandated Caroline Islands.

A Pearl Harbour communiqué states that 55 tons of bombs were dropped on Ponape, one of the large Caroline Islands, 400 miles east of Japan's great battleship anchorage at Truk in this group. Shore installations were hit and a small cargo ship was sunk in the harbour.—(Press Association and Reuter.)

NATIONAL COURSING MEETING

Popular Fancies Do Well At Powerstown Park

By MASTER McGRATH

IN the process of separating the wheat from the chaff in the Derby at Powerstown Park yesterday some of the wheat got mixed with the other, but the bulk of the good stuff was gathered, and the big stake is still open.

There were not many surprises so far as the popular fancies were concerned. The Irish Cup winner, Lost Light, has gone, but few expected him to go far. The Kerry winner, Ballyfinane Lad, and the Kingdom Cup divider, Entirely, accompanied him, but Inler's Wave, Fair Marquis, Dawros Light, Droichead Bawn and Mountain Emperor did all that was expected of them, and now Droichead Bawn and Inler's Wave share favouritism at 5/2 to win three more courses, the best backed in the top half being Dawros Light at a three, with the Seven Houses winner, Cope with Tanist, at fours.

It was not a great day's coursing; for too many hares were killed at one stage in the afternoon. Half a dozen of 7 slipped went down summarily, and if I were asked what was the most stylishly-run trial of the 48 I would say it was that fine set-to between the now 50/1 chance, Shooting Star, and Queer Hawk, in the second round.

NEVER HAD CHANCE

Lost Light never had a chance with the almost unheard-of Colour of Gold, and went out first pop, led by a good two lengths, and well and truly beaten by a dog that then succumbed to another outsider, Keeper's Hire, about whom at the close of the second round only 6/1 was on offer. Dawros Light always had the foot of Border Elegance, whom he led a few lengths and decisively out-counted, until he raced over at the top of the ground. The second time, slipped with Light of the Glen, he showed wasted superiority in the run-up, and had the better of it up the rising ground; but he did not stick it out quite so resolutely as the brindled, who was moving the stronger nearing the escapes.

Cope with Tanist ran his courses with plenty of fire, and he is one that might cause a flutter later on. He commanded his hares smartly; it was he who beat Ballyfinnane Lad in a good physical test, the Kerryman being of no assistance whatever to him, and he had good luck the second time to get the shortest spin of the day with Monkman, going up two lengths clear, wrenching and killing.

The backers of Droichead Bawn must feel even more confident of his success than previously. Battle Dawn, whom he met in the first course, did him great service, when, after being led three lengths and placed off the turn, he drove puss to him for the kill. His second course with Shay Boy was almost similar, and here again his good mouth came to his assistance; for, after leading the black three lengths, he missed his first drive, but won in for the kill.

I certainly was not impressed by Fair Marquis when slipped with Floating Nobleman, for he was inclined to slow up in his work after scoring the turn by three lengths, and there could not have been a wide margin favouring him when it ended. Again he showed the pace with Tantonvilla Square. Improving a lot in the close exchanges, he was well ahead when the black nailed his game. It was a light course.

My favourites now are Dawros Light, Cope With Tanist, Droichead Bawn and Mountain Emperor, with a preference for Inler's Wave to win out.

HORSES IN TRAINING

The Grange Con Stable

THE Grange Con trainer (Mr. P. Sleator, Jun.) is one of our foremost amateur race-riders, and trains, during most years, a considerable quota of winners. He has a good and promising team for this season, and a few of these horses will be seen out at Punchestown, Rescar and Major Key have been hunted, and it is quite likely that these two will be seen to advantage in steeplechases confined to horses of the hunter type. Cottagemore and Low Bird are not long broken, but they are two nice young horses, and, though they may not go in it wanted some time, we can be sure they will be got ready as soon as possible.

BANKERS' CUP RUGBY

BANK OF I ... 19 M. and L. ... 8

With their forwards getting the ball back well from the set scrums, mainly owing to the excellence of Graves's hooking, and their backs showing more speed and thrust than their opposite numbers, Bank of Ireland had little difficulty in defeating Munster and Leinster in the first round of the Bankers' Cup at Lansdowne road yesterday. Orr and Scott crossed for the winners in the first half, Cagney converting once and kicking a penalty goal. Scott and Graves added tries in the second period, Cagney again goaling one; Barry scored an unconverted try for Munster and Leinster, who were awarded a penalty try when Carroll was tackled after kicking ahead. Condon converted.

CURRAGH UNLUCKY

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY ... 6 Pts.
CURRAGH COMMAND ... 3 Pts.

Curragh Command were a little unlucky to lose their match with Dublin University at College Park yesterday, as they did all the attacking and were three points up till within ten minutes of the finish, when they had only four-teen men against them, McCaw, the Trinity centre, having gone off injured. The Trinity forwards, however, then took command, and with Moynan, Bradfield, Moore and Wann doing great work in the loose, they were all over their opponents and scored two quick tries. The halves, Lindsay and Wilson, were weak, and, as a result, the three-quarters got few chances. Hetreed had a good game at full-back.

The Curragh backs defended well, but with the exception of Jackson, showed little threat in attack. Best of the pack, which did great work in the first half, were Dillon, Walsh and Coffey. Dillon scored Curragh's try in the first half. Marshall and Hamilton scored Trinity's tries in the second half.

MATER IN HOSPITALS' CUP FINAL

MATER ... 8 pts. ST. VINCENTS ... nil

Mater qualified for the final of the Hospitals' Rugby Cup when defeating St. Vincents by a goal and a try to nil. B. Flanagan put them ahead with a try, and M. Feddis added another, which T. Ryan converted.

O'KEEFFE AND KEMP IN SQUASH FINAL

C. A. Kemp and J. J. O'Keeffe will meet in the final of the Irish squash rackets championship at Fitzwilliam Club tomorrow evening. In yesterday's semi-finals, Kemp beat R. N. Hogan in four games, running away with the fourth against a tired opponent, after a very hard struggle in the first three.

The other match, in which O'Keeffe beat P. D. MacWeeney, a previous holder, was a thrilling affair. After getting off to a good start, O'Keeffe lost the second and third games, but led 6-3 in the fourth. Then MacWeeney went to 7-6, but, fighting every rally, O'Keeffe levelled the games.

In the fifth MacWeeney led 6-3 and 7-5, but O'Keeffe had a match point at 8-7, which he lost. MacWeeney was then twice in hand at 9-8, but his opponent saved the match with two wonderful recoveries, and went on to get the two necessary points. Results—

Irish Championship—Semi-finals: J. J. O'Keeffe beat P. D. MacWeeney—9-2, 5-9, 9-0, 9-7, 10-9; C. A. Kemp beat R. N. Hogan—9-2, 9-7, 9-0.

To-day—5.15: C. H. Chamney v. T. P. Hogan (semi-final, plate). 6.30: W. "Andrews" v. S. E. Law (semi-final, plate).

PAT O'CONNOR AND DAVIES BOX A DRAW

Pat O'Connor, Irish cruiser-weight champion, boxed a draw with Tommy Davies, Welsh middle-weight title-holder, at the Queensberry Club last night. There was plenty of hard punching, and Davies, in the opinion of many spectators, did enough in the last three rounds to earn a victory.

Plea For Tillage Grant Fails in Dail

The Irish Times and the national interest were mentioned in the Dail yesterday during a debate on a motion by Mr. P. COGAN (C. na T.) asking for a grant of £3 in respect of every acre of land under tillage in order to promote increased and efficient food production. The motion was defeated by 83 votes to 14.

Mr. Cogan recalled a leading article in the Irish Times of January 28th last asking what evidence could be adduced in support of the apparently para-doxical position of climatic advan-tages over Denmark but a declining agricultural production and rural population.

"That paper," said Mr. Cogan, "is, I think, steadily advancing in the direction of a realisation of the best interests of this nation. That paper certainly has made consider-able progress, and has become far more national in its outlook than some of the faded green orthodox nationalist papers. I welcome that serious approach on the part of the Irish Times to this problem." He believed, he said, that at least one-third of the arable land should be under tillage.

Mr. T. O'DONNELL (C. na T.), seconding the motion, said that wheat was a terrible crop on the land, and after a few years would give them only scutch grass. The little subsidy asked for in this motion would help to make up for the depredations caused by the wheat crop.

Neither the Minister for Agricul-ture (Dr. Ryan), who was in the House, nor any other deputy of any party rose to continue the debate, and after a few minutes' silence Mr. Cogan, who had been in the Lobby, hurried back to his place, and said that as neither the Government nor the Opposition Party had any answer to the case made, he was happy to think that the motion was accepted unanimously.

The motion was rejected by 83 votes to 14.

Cyclist's Death on Kilkenny Road

Thomas Barry (35), Mount Juliet, Thomastown, Co. Kilkenny, a native of Midleton, was found dead yesterday morning on the road at Ballylynch, near Mount Juliet, with his bicycle entangled in a wire fence. He was second Whip to the Kilkenny Hounds, and had been in Thomastown the previous night arranging for his wedding next week.

Damages for Widows of Seamen

A High Court jury yesterday found in favour of Mrs. Mary Higgins, Con-nolly street, Cobh, and Mrs. Ellen Lloyd, O'Rahilly street, Cobh, in their actions against Irish Shipping, Limited, claim-ing damages for the death of their two bands, who were drowned in Cork Harbour in December, 1942, when launches on which they were working were struck by the propeller of the Irish Poplar, owned by the company, and sunk.

The jury assessed damages at £1,450 in the case of Mrs. Higgins, and £1,125 in the case of Mrs. Lloyd, and Mr. Jus-tice Maguire gave judgment accordingly, with costs, with a stay of execution for fourteen days.

Mr. J. A. Costello, S.C.; Mr. Vaughan Buckley, S.C., and Mr. MacCarthy-Morrogh (instructed by Messrs. W. Ronan and Son), appeared for Mrs. Hig-gins; the same senior counsel and Mr. S. McD. Keyes (instructed by Messrs. Donegan and Son), for Mrs. Lloyd; and Mr. Frank FitzGibbon, K.C.; Mr. Cecil Lavery, K.C., and Mr. E. C. Micks (in-structed by Messrs. D. and T. Fitz-gerald), for Irish Shipping, Ltd.

Deputy's Work Equal To £1,000 A Year

Moving a motion in the Dail yes-terday that, to ensure that each deputy received sufficient expenses, a Select Committee should be ap-pointed to ascertain the average expenses of the average deputy, Mr. JAMES DILLON said that if the £480 were subject to income tax it would be easy for deputies with-out other means to have it exempted as expenses. Unless the parliamen-tary allowance was sufficient to defray the reasonable expenses of a deputy, Parliament would become a preserve of the rich.

Declaring that a deputy's work for constituents had been found to equal £1,000 per year, assessed on the scale of a solicitor's bill of costs, Mr. Dillon said that the least onerous part of a member's duties was attendance at the Dail. "I want to make it clear," he said, "that deputies are not money-grub-bing self-seekers."

The debate was adjourned.

BEET PRICE

The beet price was announced by the Sugar Company without giving the Beet Growers' Association an opportunity of discussing it with the company, said Mr. M. CORRY (F.F.). He was told by Mr. S. T. O'KELLY, Minister for Finance, that because the board of directors had full responsibility for the management of the affairs of the company he could not answer party questions relating to the company's affairs. The Government had approved of the terms offered to the growers for the 1944 crop.

When Mr. MORRISSEY (F.G.) asked whether the Minister would accept responsibility for the price of the by-product of beet, Mr. O'KELLY replied that the matter was considered by the Government, and, in fact, the price was approved. He understood that there were dis-cussions between the Beet Growers' Association and the company.

Mr. CORRY—The only discussion that took place was an attempt by the company to rob the beet growers of £15,000.

Yarn Rationing Charges Against Galway Firm

IT took ninety minutes at yester-day's sitting of the Special Crimi-nal Court in Collins Barracks, Dublin, to read over one hundred charges regarding alleged breaches of the Yarn Rationing Order.

Messrs. James O'Flynn and Sons, Ltd., Galway, are charged on a number of counts with failing to make a return to the Minister for Supplies of the out-put of yarn from their woollen mills, and failure to provide priority over all other persons and entities to the production and delivery of the quantities of cloth, serge and blankets, as directed.

Also the firm is charged with failing to make a return of their total produc-tion of yarns at the Galway mills. Further charges are preferred of supply-ing yarns to traders without obtaining coupons; failure to give correct returns of sales of yarn; of not having the retail prices affixed to materials, and of supplying controlled goods to persons who had no buying certificate.

Daniel Doyle, manager of the Galway mills, is accused of supplying to traders quantities of yarns without obtaining coupons; of aiding and abetting the firm in its alleged failure to make a total return of the mills' total production. Together with James O'Flynn, Doyle is charged with conspiring to supply yarns to traders without obtaining the appro-priate coupons or ration documents.

Pleas of "not guilty" were entered on all counts, with the exception of charges relating to the sale of goods without having the retail price tickets attached, and a charge of selling controlled goods without the consent of the Minister.

On the application of Mr. Sean MacBride, S.C., the Court granted a separate trial for Doyle on charges of aiding and abetting the firm to make false returns. A separate trial was granted to Messrs. O'Flynn and Sons on two groups of charges, and a joint trial was granted on more than half the charges.

The charges against the firm were first taken.

The further hearing was adjourned until to-day.

School Circular to Parents

The circular that had been sent to parents of children attending Glen Ban School, Abbeyleix, was further discussed before the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Maughan Mr. Justice Geoghegan, Mr. Justice O'Byrne and Mr. Justice Black in the Supreme Court, Dublin, yesterday, and the further hearing of the appeal in the action arising out of it was adjourned.

The appeal was on behalf of Mrs. Kathleen G. Lefroy, Dundrum, President of the Parents' National Educational Union (Dublin Branch) from a verdict and judgment for £375 against her in an action of Glen Ban, Limited, and Frederick street Dublin, for damages for alleged malicious falsehoods in the cir-cular, resulting in the withdrawal of children from the school

Discussing the circular, which con-tained the words: "Circumstances have arisen, however, which make it imperative that the school should become in-dependent at the end of this year," Mr. J. M. Fitzgerald, S.C., resuming his argument on behalf of Glen Ban, Ltd., said that that was an absolute mis-statement of fact of the most serious character. The jury had found that that was what the words meant, and they could, he submitted, have found nothing else. They had found that the words were false. On the question of damages, Mr. Fitzgerald said that the case had been properly laid by claim-ing general damages by reason of loss of business.

Deep Accidental Deaths

A verdict of accidental death was re-turned at the inquest at the Meath Hospital, Dublin, yesterday, on John Carlton (60), ex-D.M.P. sergeant, 4 Parkview avenue, Hazelhatch Cross, Dublin.

A cyclist, who was knocked down by a runaway horse at the junction of Clan-drinan street and the South Circular road on January 31, and died last Monday.

John Kennedy (48), yardman, Cardiff Bridge, Finglas, died at the Mater Hos-pital on Monday last from injuries re-ceived when a horse which he was lead-ing in the yard of his employer suddenly jumped forward and knocked him down. At the inquest yesterday a verdict of accidental death was returned.

£2,150 for Cork Widow

Yesterday a jury found in favour of Mrs. Margaret Hamborne, Monat Vap-don terrace, Wellington road, Cork, her action against Irish Shipping, Limited, claiming damages for the death of her husband, who, it was stated, fell from the gangway of the company's ship, Irish Willow, when she was going on board at midnight on June 12th, 1943, to see an engineer in the course of his duty, and was drowned. They assessed damages at £2,150, for which the Presi-dent of the High Court gave judgment, with costs.

Claim Against Architect Fails

Stating that one month's notice and the equivalent of six weeks' pay was reasonable, Judge Davitt dismissed a claim for damages for wrongful dismissal brought by Miss Rita Scott, Windsor avenue, Fairview, Dublin, against Vincent Kelly, architect, 87 Merrion square, Dublin, at the Dublin Circuit Court yesterday.

The plaintiff said that she had been employed for the last 13½ years by Mr. Kelly as a confidential secretary, and managed his financial affairs. She had begun with a salary of 30/- a week, which had been increased to £3 5/- In February, 1942, there had been friction between her and her employer over the management of his private affairs, and in July, 1942, he told her he was going to close the office at the end of the month. She received a month's notice and, in addition, £20.

In a reference given to her it was stated that the failure of building opera-tions owing to the war was the reason for her dismissal. After the August holiday week-end the office opened again as usual, with the other members of the staff present.

For the defence it was pleaded that reasonable notice was given, and that the plaintiff was employed as a book-keeper.

In his decision, Judge Davitt said that obviously certain matters had not been mentioned to in the case, but he was solely concerned with the exact legal relations of the parties, particularly with regard to the length of the notice.

Hacksaw Used on Safe

The hearing was continued in the Dublin Circuit Criminal Court yesterday of the case in which Gerard Kiteallen (31), professional boxer, 81 Horseman's row, Dublin, is jointly charged with Michael O'Connor, Charlemont row, Dublin, with having broken into the offices of Merville Dairy, Finglas, the property of Craigie Brothers, and stealing food vouchers, cheques, cheque orders and cash amounting to £581—all to the total value of £666.

Gerard Kiteallen and his brother, Hugh Kiteallen (24), Lamma Carroll (26), Dominick street, Dublin, and Michael O'Connor, were also charged with con-spiracy with John O'Connor to break and enter the same premises.

Sergeant D. O'Riordan, Finglas, said that a corner of the safe at the back had been cut with a hacksaw and the back prised off. Saw blades, three iron bars, a hammer and a cold chisel had been found in a field behind the dairy.

Patrick Geraghty said that Gerard Kiteallen asked him for £35 in notes in exchange for silver, which he gave him.

The hearing was adjourned until to-day.

Gold Shares Feature in Brighter Markets

THE London Stock Markets have taken on a brighter tone in the past two days, and more activity has been in evidence. No doubt, the better news from the war-fronts has assisted the position, while the reactionary movements of the past few weeks have made prices more attractive.

British Funds were almost alone in failing to make any movement yester-day. It is possible, however, that this is due to funds being accumulated for the new savings campaign to be launched next month. British Railway stocks, however, were also quiescent, despite the coming dividend announce-ments by the Southern and L.N.E. com-panies.

Among Industrials, Celanese provided a good spot, with a further rise to 28/3, while Cable and Wireless Ord. put on another 10/- to 80/-. The best market of the day was for Rand Gold shares, which, following reassuring advices from Johannesburg regarding the flood and labour positions, received considerable support. Particular attention was again devoted to the companies in the West "Wit" group.

RUBBER DEAL

Details of the proposed sale of the assets in Brazil of Parana Plantations, Ltd., are now available. The offer to purchase was made a year ago by financial interests in Brazil, and, after negotiations, the price has been fixed at £1,620,000. The directors recommend the shareholders to accept the offer, which, it is stated, they are satisfied will have the consent of the British Government if the shareholders approve the terms.

The Parana Plantations capital is £—825,000—all in 5/- shares—and the circular to the shareholders states that the purchase price, with other sterling resources of the company, should permit a return of voluntary liquidation of the company of not less than 5/- per share.

Sudan Plantations, Ltd., and Lazard Bros. and Co., who, together, can speak for 20 per cent. of the total Parana capital, will vote in favour of accepting the offer. The decision will be made at a meeting to be held on March 25. No dividend has ever been paid by Parana Plantations, which has been in existence since 1925. Since 1938 the capital was divided into 5/- shares, in 1937, the price has been as low as 3d. To-day it is 5/-.

BREWERIES RISE

Brewery shares were again among the more active sections of the Stock Ex-change yesterday, and many small rises in quotations were marked. The tale of satisfactory dividends was maintained with announcements from Peter Walker (Warrington) and Robert Cain and Sons, of Liverpool, and Steward Patteson, Ltd., of Norwich.

Peter Walker's is again paying a final dividend of 6½ p.c., making 8 p.c. for the year. With one exception—1941, when 7½ p.c. was paid—8 p.c. has been paid each year since 1937. The com-pany's capital is £4,270,000, of which £2,370,000 is in £1 Ord. stock units. These have a market value of 52/5, and thus offer a yield of £4 19/- p.c.

In 1942 Steward and Patteson in-creased trading profit by over £60,000 to £402,659. This year this improve-ment is well maintained at £441,642. Net profit, after providing for income tax and E.P.T. and other charges, amounted to £55,638 (against

IRISH ARCHITECTURAL RECORDS

A notable collection of architectural records concerning well-known Irish buildings, with the aid of which it is hoped to create a national record of Irish architecture, has been handed over to the National Library, where it will be available for inspection.
The collection, so far as it has gone—and it now is well worthy of a visit by all students of architecture—has been made by an advisory committee for the recording of Irish architecture, who have been working on it since 1939. In each of the last four years measured drawings of some three or four different buildings of note, made by students of the School of Architecture, University College, Dublin, have been presented to the collection under an arrangement made by the late Professor J. M. Butler, and to these and other acquisitions have been added the Murray collection, generously handed over by the Royal Institute of the Architects of Ireland. Original architects' drawings were desirable, but, where these were not available, photostat copies of drawings and photographs proved valuable supplements. Co-operation also has been given by the Photographic Society of Ireland.
With a solid basis for the establishment of a national collection, the Committee now are appealing for the collaboration and support of the public, either by the notification or presentation of drawings of buildings, old or new, or by gifts of photographs or money. Apart from the possible acquisition of original drawings, funds will be required to cover the cost of making copies, since it is probable that after the war many drawings will be traced abroad of which copies will be very valuable. The Hon. Secretary of the Committee is Mr. M. J. McDermott, School of Architecture, University College, Dublin.

Bequest to Ireland

Already, within a few hours after its publication, there are people who construe the last will and testament of the late Mrs. George Bernard Shaw as a costly jibe at her native land. They recall Swift's cruel poem which concludes:

"He gave the little wealth he had,
To build a house for fools and mad;
To show, by one satiric touch,
No nation wanted it so much,"

and misapply it to Mrs. Shaw's munificent bequest. Let us say at once that we have no patience with this attitude. There may be more than a touch of "Shavianism" in the wording of the will; yet to anybody who reads it without prejudice, and without search for ulterior motives, it must appear a straight and generous document. If the testatrix speaks of "awkward manners" and "vulgarities of speech," does she not also pay tribute to "highly instructed and capable persons" and to their "valuable qualifications?" Her strictures, in any event, are not intended—therein differing from the benefits of her will—to apply exclusively to Ireland. Even if they did apply to this land alone, why should we be touchy? It happens very often, indeed, that Irishmen make a mark not only in their own country, but in the great world outside it. It also happens—not so often, but often enough—that their advancement is handicapped by lack of certain social graces and of "training for personal contacts, whether with individuals or popular audiences." If the fact is not admitted without reluctance, it cannot be denied unless we are willing to blind ourselves to the truth. Yet, if Mrs. Shaw's bequest had been made directly to the Irish nation—as the gift of the National Park at Muckross was made—its rejection would have been possible; for—pace the Minister for Supplies—there are members of Dail and Seanad Eireann who bitterly resent the suggestion that anything could be otherwise than perfect in this best of all lands. Happily, the bequest appears—at least, to our lay minds—to be fool-proof. It will be administered through trustees, and whatever controversy may rage will leave its terms unimpaired, and its acceptance a matter for those who may qualify to accept it.

Several thousand pounds a year can go a long way. The sum is not enough to turn every citizen of the twenty-six counties—or of all Ireland, since the reports of Mrs. Shaw's will are not clear on this point—into a model of deportment. Wisely expended, however, it could help greatly to broaden the average man's outlook. The testatrix herself has pointed a way. Her will seeks to bring "the masterpieces of fine art within the reach of the people of Ireland," and explains that under the heading of fine art are included "works of the highest class in the fields of orchestral and classical music, painting, sculpture, fine printing and literature produced by any country in the world in any age." It begins to look as if Dublin's long-desired concert hall and symphony orchestra are within range of achievement, and as if the art galleries will become competitors for a few of those pictures from which they are debarred at present by lack of funds. One can think, indeed, of many interpretations for the first clause of Mrs. Shaw's testament. Concerning the other clauses—those which seek to establish institutions or chairs for the "teaching, promoting and encouraging" of "self-control, elocution, deportment, the arts of personal contact, of social intercourse, and other arts of public, private, professional and business life"—the possibilities of friction are unbounded. It will take a wise man to decide exactly how these objects can be achieved, and to devise the machinery for them; the rush of charlatans and cranks will be like a tidal wave. We cannot envy the trustees their task. Not long ago an organisation of Irish benefactors discovered that the purchase of a single picture brought a storm about its head. What will be the fate of a body which will be required to choose almost daily among the solicitations of a dozen established and not-yet-established claimants to the reward of culture?

A Merchant Navy

In his address at the first annual dinner of the Maritime Institute in Dublin last night, Mr. J. Leydon, Secretary of the Department of Supplies and Chairman of Irish Shipping, Ltd., looked forward to an Irish mercantile marine after the war. It was agreed, he said, that Irish Shipping, Ltd., would remain in existence after the war—not in opposition to other companies, but, if possible, in co-operation with them—and would take steps to assemble, at the earliest opportunity, a fleet of modern ocean-going ships which would be adequate for the importation of all the nation's needs. He explained that at the present time many difficulties lay in the way of the acquisition of ships to be used for Ireland's purposes only, but that, since "a country without its own tonnage was helpless in a major war," an effort would be made to build up a complete merchant navy, subject to no restriction by outside interests. No Irishman can greet this programme with anything but pleasure. Not only in war, but in peace, it is to the advantage of an independent State—and, in particular, an island State—to have control over its own shipping, just as over its internal transport. Indeed, one can only wonder that, before Ireland's position as a neutral in the present war made the purchase of shipping an urgent necessity, and led to the foundation of Irish Shipping, Ltd., the people of this island had so little interest in the sea. Other small States, notably Holland and Norway, possessed large merchant fleets; but the overwhelmingly greater part of all our imports came to this country in British and other vessels. The war awakened us, in this matter as in some others, and we may hope to reap a profit from our experience in the future.

Mr. Leydon, however, had some further ideas upon this subject. He gave an account of the dealings of Irish Shipping, Ltd., in marine insurance, and hoped that after the war the company would develop this business of underwriting "on the most ambitious scale." He suggested that the education of boys for a career at sea would give the whole venture valuable backing, and would ensure that Irish-owned ships could be also Irish-manned. Finally, for the development of this mercantile marine two other things are needed. Dockyards, able to handle all repair work, must be available; and harbours and harbour works must be maintained in good condition. The other day it was reported that the Galway Harbour Board, which is in the direst financial straits, had hopes of Government assistance to tide it over the emergency, and that there was a prospect of State aid for all Irish harbours. Certainly it is the duty of a far-seeing Government to see that all important ports are maintained in usable condition for future, if not for present, traffic; but may it not be necessary to go even further, and to place all such harbours permanently under national administration? If our internal transport and our shipping are to be State concerns, it is illogical to leave these termini of the shipping routes under local bodies. There can be little surprise if it is found later that an integral part of any scheme for Irish shipping is a National Harbour Board.

EDUCATION BILL AMENDMENTS

The Vocational Education (Amendment) Bill was passed in the Dail yesterday.

Amendments moved by Mr. Derrig, Minister for Education, were passed. They state that Vocational Education Committees should report suspensions of officers to the Minister, and that where the holder of an office was unfit to hold office the Minister might satisfy him and the Vocational Committee of his opinion by registered post, and by order remove him from office after fourteen days, despite representations.

Mr. Derrig said that no teacher could be removed from office without knowing the reason. No action, he said also, was taken on the report of an inspector alone.

WINTER RAINFALL

Rainfall during the winter was fairly normal but somewhat heavier than in 1942. In January, however, there were 2.96 inches of rain, which fell on seventeen days. For November, December, and January the total rainfall was over eight inches. As there was very little frost during January the weather during this month would not interfere to any extent with farming and tillage operations, an Irish Times reporter was informed.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

GAMES FOR GIRLS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES
SIR,—With regard to the remarks quoted in the Irish Times by the Assistant Master of the Rotunda Hospital that "concentration on competitive sport, or anything that would tend to encourage pronounced muscular development in young girls, would be detrimental to their capacity for bearing children," I feel it necessary to reply. As a senior physician of long experience, in which many prominent athletes have been attended in their confinements by me, I have never seen the slightest abnormality which could possibly be attributed to athletics. I have spoken to several colleagues of long experience in obstetrics and they agree with me.—Yours, etc.,
"SURPRISED."
Dublin, February 14th, 1944.

GOOD FOOD

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES
SIR,—Lord Monteagle's interesting letter in to-day's issue of the Irish Times on the subject of Irish cooking will, I hope, bear fruit.
At the moment there are several organisations at work in Dublin for the protection and promotion of health, but, I think, one very important factor seems to have escaped the notice of the public and the authorities. I refer to the deplorable manner in which foodstuffs are exhibited in and outside of many shops, unprotected from weather, dust, dirt and other means of contamination not to be mentioned. This condition is, however, completely eclipsed by the positively filthy and dangerous condition of farm-carts transporting supposedly fresh vegetables into the city. I frequently see vegetables dumped from these disgusting carts on to the roadway in a well-known street, and sold from there with other foodstuffs by equally dirty looking vendors. One wonders how it comes that the women of Dublin can tolerate such conditions.
Dirty foodstuffs must be responsible for much of the ill-health from which Dublin suffers, and it would seem that the public health authorities are either blind or asleep. It should be borne in mind that about one-fifth of the population of Eire live and move and get what health they can in Dublin.—Yours, etc.,
"WAKE UP, DUBLIN."
Dublin, February 15th, 1944.

OBITUARY

MR. A. McDOWELL

The death occurred recently at his residence, 12 Terenure Park, Dublin, of Mr. Alexander McDowell. He was once a Customs official, and took a keen interest in the Gaelic League in its early days in Belfast. His main interest was in Irish traditional music, about which he wrote a number of books, the manuscrpts of which include some original matter. Mr. McDowell was one of the pioneers of bus routes in this country, operating the former Southern General Omnibus Co. in Cork, Limerick, and Waterford areas. His bus service to Granard from Dublin was the first to run on this route. The company was absorbed by the Great Southern Railways some years ago. The remains were taken to Belfast after Mass at Terenure. The Bishop of Down and Connor, Dr. Mageean, attended the funeral in Belfast.

ABBEY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The Rev. R. C. Elliott presided at the annual business and social meeting of Abbey Presbyterian Church, Dublin, when reports from upwards of twenty congregational organisations showed that vigorous and successful work had been carried on during the year and that contributions to the various funds and missions had been maintained. The Women's Missionary Association had received a legacy of £189 from the late Miss Armstrong.
The following were elected on the Congregational Committee:—Messrs. J. T. Band, T. Bell, M. Bell, R. Malcolm Bell, A. R. Davies, W. Duff, J. Ellis, J. G. Finlay, E. Garrett, W. Harrison, H. J. Lyons, W. C. McKee, E. W. Nesbitt, D. F. Robertson, M. A. Smyth, J. Taylor, J. H. Thompson, J. Topping, A. E. Wilson, G. E. Woods. To the existing Board of Trustees the following were elected:—The Rev R. C. Elliott, Messrs. J. Beggs, J. Cassie, W. H. McDowell, T. G. Ramsay, and A. E. Thompson.

CONTROL URGED

The control of confectionery supplies was urged by Mr. K. P. Byrne, who presided at the annual meeting in Dublin of the Confectioners' and Fruiterers' Association. The production of sugar and chocolate confectionery, he said, for the year 1939 was 257,000 cwts., valued at £1,036,000; for the year 1942 production was 208,000 cwts., valued at £1,473,000. Thus the quantity produced dropped by about 22 per cent., although the value of the goods increased by over 42 per cent. If they were to have control of the confectionery trade let them have a full and proper control.
A resolution was passed asking the Minister for Supplies to insist that all importers of fruit use every endeavour to obtain only the best quality fresh fruit, and protesting against any monopoly of importing fruit being given by the Government to any firm or individual.

HELP FOR NEEDY FAMILIES

This will enable the students of the College, who constitute the Guild, to supplement, by means of food vouchers and clothing, over a period of about a year, the welfare of at least six poor families with whose circumstances the students became acquainted during their duties as extern hospital students, as well as by subsequent visiting.
The Guild expresses its gratitude to the public for their response and to cinema proprietors, who drew attention to the flag day.

BADLY ENDOWED UNIVERSITY

That their university was one of the worst endowed and most overwrought universities in Europe, and that under a native Government, was stated by Professor Agnes O'Farrelly, President of the Women Graduates' Association of the National University, when speaking at the annual dinner in Dublin. It was truly marvellous in spite of this what fine work had been done, she said.

The British Postmaster-General announces that the civil postal service with Sicily, Sardinia and provinces in Southern Italy has been restored in consequence of an order by General Wilson, Allied Commander-in-Chief, Mediterranean theatre. The service will be restricted to unregistered letters not exceeding two ounces in weight, and postcards of purely personal nature.

A Memoir of Keats

Keats had a nephew who evinced, even in early childhood, an unusual talent for manufacturing spurious coins. At the age of twelve he was already in the habit of making his own pocket money. His parents were poor and could not procure for him the tuition that would enable him to proceed from the science of penny-making to the more intricate and remunerative medium of work in silver. The boy's attempts at making half-crowns were very poor indeed and on one occasion resulted in the father being presented with six months hard labour by a local magistrate. Keats, who was in reduced circumstances and could not afford to help himself, put the problem before Chapman, who was in tow with a wealthy widow. The widow was induced to give £100 to have the boy educated. Six months after the money had been given over and a tutor found, Keats and Chapman visited the boy's home to see what progress was being made. They found the boy in his workshop engrossed in the production of a very colourable half-crown, working with meticulous industry on what was a very life-like representation of his late majesty, King Edward. To Keats, Chapman expressed satisfaction at the improvement in the boy's skill.
"I think he is making excellent progress," he said.
"He is forging a head," Keats said.

Are You Interested?

A rather decent London firm named Bertram Rota have been kind enough to let me in on the ground floor of a bargain that's going. It is the royal edition of the Pierpoint Morgan Catalogues. This copy of the catalogues is rather rare because the only other copies printed were presented to people like the President of France, the Czar of Russia (more luck Skibbereen!) and Prince Franz Ferdinand. It is an ornate job. "The Catalogue of which is bound in crushed morocco inlaid with a lovely Grolier design. The Catalogue of jewels is in a sumptuous binding of morocco and shagreen with fine ormolu mounts, one enclosing a large amethyst." The price of these catalogues is, quite frankly, two thousand pounds. Hmmmm.
If a list of one's possession's costs two thousand pounds, well . . . , what is one really worth? Pardon? All the money in the world is no use unless one has one's health. Oh yes, agreed. How eccentric, though, to have somebody else's health.

MAINIE JELLETT

AN APPRECIATION

The death occurred in a Dublin nursing home yesterday of Mainie Jellett, the well-known artist.
Her work as a theorist alone, writes T. McG. in an appreciation, would have ensured her a lasting place in the history of art in Ireland. But Mainie Jellett was much more than a theorist. For nearly twenty years, since she first began her work as an art teacher in Dublin, she had been an inspiration to young artists.
It is, however, as an artist that posterity will tend to estimate Mainie Jellett, and it is now a matter for rejoicing among her friends and admirers that they were able in her lifetime to give expression to their appreciation of the richness of her gifts, particularly as revealed in such pictures of her last years as "The Ninth Hour" and "Madonna of Eire." The latter was first exhibited only last autumn at the Living Art Exhibition.
Miss Jellett was the daughter of the late William Jellett, K.C., and Mrs. Jellett, of 36 Fitzwilliam square, Dublin. Her family was always associated with artistic and musical activities in Dublin—Miss Bay Jellett, the well-known violinist, is one of her sisters—and Mainie opted for painting when she was a very young girl. At the Dublin Metropolitan School (now the National College) of Art she was a Taylor prize-winner. From there she went to study under Sickert at the Westminster School of Art. And then she went to join her fellow-student friend, Erie Hone, in France.
Albert Gleize was one of the most distinguished modern artists in Paris, but he had never thought of teaching till two unknown and very serious young Irish girls introduced themselves and announced diffidently that they had studied his exhibited work and wished him to be their teacher! But he took them on, and, in both cases, Ireland has occasion to be gratified at the results of her children's daring.

PRAISE FOR FEIS CEOIL MEDALLIST

The Scottish Press has given very favourable notice to a musician well known in Dublin, Miss Sanchia Fielou, harpist, former gold medallist at the Feis Ceoil and now a member of the B.B.C. Scottish Orchestra. A notice in The Scotsman of a special concert of French music, given in the National Gallery, Edinburgh, says: "Miss Sanchia Fielou's playing of Renie's Legends and pieces by Hasselmans and Grandjany, masters of the resources of the instrument, proved an attractive departure into the unfamiliar. Those who have heard Miss Fielou before know her for a highly accomplished artist, and her solos yesterday set off the good qualities of the instrument to excellent advantage."

DUBLIN ALLOTMENTS FOR UNEMPLOYED

Only four hundred of the twelve hundred allotments in the City of Dublin which had been reserved for unemployed men are now available, it was learned yesterday.
An Irish Times reporter was informed yesterday that if there are not sufficient applications from unemployed men the available plots will be allotted to employed applicants.
